1.2.2. Price fluctuation risk: Cryptocurrency prices can and do fluctuate greatly on any given day and due to such price fluctuations, the User’s cryptographic assets may be subject to large swings in value and may even become worthless.

1.2.3. Risk in placing orders: An order may be incomplete and incorrect. Any order, including Market Orders, Limit Orders and Stop-limit Orders, may not be (and are not guaranteed) executable at the price or amount specified by the User. Orders may be cancelled at PointPay’s discretion or for any other reason. A Market Order will normally be executed as soon as possible and the execution price of the Transaction may deviate significantly from the nearest bid/ask price seen by the User, resulting in significant loss. In addition, an order may not place completely or at all or may be placed at the wrong price or may suffer an unexpected delay in execution because of any of a variety of reasons. Under certain market conditions, the User may find it difficult or impossible to liquidate a position. This can occur, for example, when there is insufficient liquidity in the market. Placing contingent orders, such as "stop-loss" or "stop-limit" orders, will not necessarily limit losses or lock profits to the intended amounts, since market conditions may make it impossible to execute such orders.

1.2.4. Risk in mistakes in orders: The User may inadvertently due to their own error or because of a system or other human error place an order for an asset which results in an unwanted order. The User, PointPay or any third party (including a financial institution or payment institution or hacker) may send crypto to the wrong wallet address during the funding or withdrawal. The User may be prevented from sending an Order due to hardware or software issues (including, without limitation, Internet and other network connectivity issues). PointPay is not responsible for such hardware or software issues. Unauthorized third parties may access or use their accounts and effect transactions without their knowledge or authorization. Exceptional market conditions, force majeure events and similar events can cause the booking of funds to be delayed.

1.2.5. Information risk: There may be errors or omissions on the reporting module or otherwise delay, inaccuracy, error, interruption or omissions in providing market quotations or other information provided on the on which the User might rely in making an Order.

1.2.6. Cyber attack risk: There may be third party or other attacks targeting computers/networks, spreading malware, running botnets, (D)DOS attacks, defacing websites, violations of network security, etc which can material alter, intercept or otherwise interfere with the giving or execution of a an order on the or the transfer of funds to and from the User's wallet.

Such positions shall have the same leverage (if any), stop loss and take profit, to the maximum extent possible. Trades below the minimum trade amount shall not be opened. All such positions shall be modified and/or closed automatically if and when modified/closed by the copied trader, for whatsoever reason, without providing any further notice and without any action on the User's part. The User should be able and prepared to bear the loss of the entire investment the User made in such a copied trader.

1.2.9. Token risk: Any token listed, or the underlying project, may be abandoned by the creators, suffer from lack of success or business failure for a number of reasons including but not limited to lack of interest from the public, funding failures, lack of commercial success or prospects (e.g. caused by competing projects) and the User may incur substantial losses as a result of investing in any token listed on the PointPay platform.
